MATURATION

The 7-year Kentucky Bourbon undergoes a meticulous maturation process that enhances its complexity and depth. Initially aged in traditional charred new American oak barrels, the bourbon develops its foundational flavors of caramel, vanilla, and oak, along with the characteristic smoothness and warmth of classic Kentucky Bourbon. After this initial aging period, the bourbon is transferred to Port wine barrels for a finishing period. These barrels, previously used to age rich and sweet Port wine, impart additional layers of dark fruit flavors and a subtle sweetness to the bourbon. The interaction between the bourbon and the residual wine soaked into the wood of the Port barrels introduces nuances of dark cherries, blackberries, and a velvety richness that complements the traditional bourbon profile. This dual-barrel aging process not only enriches the flavor palette but also adds an exceptional smoothness and a unique character to the bourbon, making it a distinguished spirit that stands out for its elegance and depth. The careful management of this maturation process ensures that each bottle of this 7-year Kentucky Bourbon finished in Port barrels offers a luxurious and memorable tasting experience.
